It is much easier to keep from coveting thy neighbor's wife than it is his automobile.

Gov. Glenn, of North Carolina, in a recent address told the women to wear pants, if they wanted to. If all reports around here are true many of the married women wear them.

Rev. J. D. Hall, of Philadelphia, in a recent sermon said, "the hardest sinner in the world is the one who 'honks, honks' all over the neighborhood on Sunday afternoon." But that is not the reason we don't do it."

Woodrow Wilson may have thought that it was hard to control some students, but he will probably wish he was back at school teaching before he gets through with Murphy, Taggart, Sullivan and other politicians of like ilk.

If the Psalmist had spoken after careful consideration and thought instead of in haste, the only change he would probably have made would have been to use an adjective before the word liars to make the statement more emphatic.

The Vermont Election.

No one, who read the result of the state election in Vermont last week, can longer doubt that the Progressive Party will poll a large vote throughout the country at the presidential election in November and that Theodore Roosevelt, even if not elected president, will be a great factor in the race.

In this election in round numbers the vote of the Republican candidate, for governor was 25,000; the Democratic candidate 20,000 and the Progressive candidate 15,000.

The Progressive Party had been in existence only about a month and less than a month's campaign had been made by its candidates. It had no organization and its candidate for governor was a practically unknown preacher.

It is reasonable to believe from these figures that if the presidential election had been held last week Theodore Roosevelt would have carried Vermont. With two months in which to organize and preach the doctrine of the party is it not a certainty that Roosevelt will carry Vermont in November.

Every report from that state indicates that Roosevelt was thousands of votes stronger than the Republican candidate for governor. No fair minded man will deny that he has wonderful personal following throughout the country and would have and will receive many of the votes that went to the other candidates in the Vermont election.

Vermont is acknowledged to be one of the conservative states of the Union. It has always given its electoral vote to the Republican party, since the organization of that party. In over 60 years it has never failed to elect a Republican governor. It has been as consistently Republican as Georgia has been Democratic. If Roosevelt can carry Vermont does he not stand a good chance of being the next president of the United States?

We have heard many bitter things said about Col. Roosevelt since the first of the year, but even his most bitter enemies admit that he is a man of wonderful abilities, has a remarkable personal following, is a great campaigner, a good organizer and a shrewd and resourceful politician. Every movement with which he has aligned himself in the past has grown rapidly in popular favor and it is almost certain that he will be much stronger on November 5, the day of the election, than he is today.

When Roosevelt first entered the fight for the Republican nomination for president early in the year it was freely predicted that before the nomination was made that he would be the worst discredited man in the United States; that he would not have a handful of delegates before the convention and that from the most popular man in the United States, he would have become the most unpopular.

Everyone knows the story of the primaries, how he carried every state in which a primary election was held, including Ohio, and that it tested the strength of the machine politicians and office holders and that the only thing that prevented his nomination was that President Taft controlled the party organization. That the nomination of President Taft was made at Chicago in direct opposition to the wish of the great majority of the Republicans of the United States and was successful only through the power of political manipulation, can not be honestly disputed.

The Vermont state election would indicate that Roosevelt will be as important a factor in the election in November as he was before the convention at Chicago and that the Progressive Party must be reckoned with at that time.

Obituary.

"To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die."

Samuel Clark, son of Henry and Mary J. Clark, was born in Highland county, Ohio, Feb. 14, 1850. He grew to manhood in Highland county and was well known to most of those present, who will ever remember his ready smile, hearty hand clasp, quick sympathy and unaffected and straight forward manner, beneath which lay a constant flow of genial humor with now and then a touch of tender, kindly sentiment.

He was married to Lizzie McClure, of Highland, Ohio, Feb. 8, 1894, and for eighteen happy years they walked hand in hand. Nov. 24, 1898 their hearts were made glad by the birth of a little daughter, Mary, who is now the sustaining comfort of her widowed mother.

If it be true that it is at home that every man must be known by those who would make a just estimate of his worth, then the deceased took rank among the noblest and best, for a truer husband and a more affectionate father has never lived or died among us.

To him home was "the spot of earth supremely blest, a dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest." At the age of 21 the deceased suffered an attack very similar in character to that of his last illness, and was brought near to death's door. Since that time he has never been robust and has suffered similarly although in a lesser degree from time to time.

He died in Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 30, 1912, where he had lived for a number of years, after an illness of but a few days. Two brothers and two sisters survive him, to whom he was bound by ties of the closest affection.

His life's labors were well done and for his future we have no fear. Although not a sectarian in religion, he was supported by the Christian faith and his life was molded upon this faith. One short sleep past we wake eternally and death shall be no more.

The good widow was about to sell her household furniture, her rugs, plated ware and what not. As she was going over these articles her eyes filled with tears; a host of memories rose to her mind, and, laying aside a half dozen knives, she said: "Oh, dear, I can't let these go. They've been in poor George's mouth too often!"
